It is in our nature to hold onto things that are dear to us. They remind us of people, places and events. The items may be valuable but more often than not are treasured for sentimental reasons. Many people rarely look at their sentimental items, but keep them for the memories they illicit, reinforcing a connection difficult to break.

The backs of cupboards and drawers are home to many family heirlooms and precious things. Reloved aims to bring buried but cherished objects to light. Those that are old, used, discarded or in disrepair were loved at one time in their history. They include silver salt and pepper shakers usually wrapped in tissue and kept in a dresser, a dish retrieved from the Sofala tip, a broken mantle clock from the dining room at the Hill End hotel, heirloom silver pots, a loved aunt's crystal decanter, treasures retrieved from cabinets, and antique spoons. There are blue and white jugs from my mum's collection - now in safe custody at the back of my own cupboard since she has passed.

My subjects evoke many memories for their custodians. With their image in paint, they now are given a new life and are Reloved.

Reloved
(obsolete):

simple past tense
of relove, re+love, to love in return, to be loved again.

We place our precious objects
in safe storage to keep them in our hearts. When they are unwrapped
and revealed they become Reloved.
